"The Still Small Voice Within"

Written by Chad Glang

The cobblestone square in Venice is surrounded by walls built during the 13th and 14th centuries. Though behind the facades are distinct buildings, what one sees from the square is a graceful, hodge-podge continuity. Vivaldi composed his "Four Seasons" here, and behind me is a grand hall where I'll hear it performed this evening. This large space began as a medieval soup kitchen and homeless shelter. After a couple of centuries it was appropriated by the upper class, to become a school for Venice's best and brightest . . . adorned with a parquet marble floor and magnificent paintings on the walls and ceiling.

In front of me is an unassuming wooden door, partially open. I enter. A small, warm sanctuary. More homey and welcoming than the many imposing cathedrals which are all towers and marble and gold. I want to be here. I want to rest. Post-Gregorian chant sacred music softly fills the space. A dozen tourists from several countries mill and murmur.

I am drawn to a simple carved wood crucifix, perhaps three feet tall, in the back. I sit before it. Having stumbled across Jesus in my wanderings, I reflect on how he made his historical appearance in another easy-to-miss place . . . a far corner of the Roman Empire. "Feed my sheep," he said; and for this he was killed. How inconvenient when Jesus says "In God's Kingdom, there are no insiders, no outsiders." So we killed him. Silence that voice, please, when it interferes with business as usual.

And so it is with the "still small voice within." Our ego, seat of self-focus, has its Pharisaic business to attend to. "Hey, Can't you see how busy (important) I am?" How inconvenient to stop, sit and listen. So, each day, we replay the Passion. The Sanhedrin convenes, the vote is clear. "I'm in power, and I have important things to do." In fact, we're so busy doing them that we don't even know we are silencing that quiet voice of goodness, somewhere off in a far corner of the inner Empire. Until one day, when we are somehow drawn to a partially-open door.

BOOK REVIEW

By Patricia Francek, Soul-Link Council Member

Soul Prints, Your Path To Fulfillment by Marc Gafni

The book Soul Prints, offers an engaging, creative and inspiring conversation on the discovery and radical uniqueness of each person's soul print. Soul Print, as defined by the author, is one's spiritual signature which belongs only to oneself; it is special, unique and irreplaceable. It is one's Sacred Autobiography which needs to be shared with others.

The author, Marc Gafni, is a philosopher, lecturer, and dean of Melitz public culture center in Israel.

He uses Biblical myth, folklore, and other storytelling to reveal the message

"Sit beside me in long moments of shared solitude, knowing both our absolute aloneness and our undeniable belonging.

Dance with me in the silence and in the sound of small daily words, holding neither against me at the end of the day."

THE DANCE

that each of us is compelled to leave our authentic soul print in the world, moving from loneliness to connection with ourselves, with others and with God (as we understand God to be for us.)

The author's purpose in writing this book can be summed up in his own words: "Only the fire of your unique soul print can light up your life and transform your existence from the routine fulfillment of obligation to the passionate unfolding of your unique story in the world . . . This book is about lighting the lantern of your soul."

"What is needed is to learn afresh, to observe, and to discover for ourselves, the meaning of wholeness."

Soul-Link Council is Formed

In an effort to expand its size and scope, a Soul-Link Council was recently formed. The Council is a broad based group committed to the spiritual growth of Soul-Link participants. Recently, the Board of Trustees, which stewards the legal and financial aspects of the organization made a decision to create the Soul-Link Council which will serve as the visionary and developmental arm of the organization. The role of this new Council shall encompass the following activities:

- To create an overall short and long term vision for Soul-Link
- To be a "think tank" for ideas and assist in the implementation of these ideas and evaluate their effectiveness
- To assist in the development of resources, i.e. people, finances and leaders to support the vision of Soul-Link
- To create a strong communication network for Soul-Link so that participants are supported in their search for a deeper sense of soul connection.
